Program Meeting: Luella Leaving and a Lasting Legacy Carol A. Stuart July 13, 2023 6:30 David McCullough Community Room

A Cheatham County native, Carol Stuart is a graduate of Cheatham County Central High School (1979) and holds B.S. (1983) and M.A. (2022) degrees from Middle Tennessee State University. Stuart recently finished a master's she started years ago, completing a capstone creative project about her paternal grandmother's 1920 domestic-violence related divorce that a cousin had unearthed through genealogy work—with Luella leaving her first husband the week the Tennessee special session began meeting to ratify women's suffrage. A former journalist including 26 years at The Tennessean, short stints at USA Today and the Memphis Press-Scimitar, and an internship at Music City News, Stuart now works as associate editor in MTSU's University Publications department. She has three young adult children and is still a huge sports fan.

Her presentation will be on:

"Meeting a grandmother I never met and adding to real women's voices of marriage, divorce, and life in the early 20th century."

TOPICS

South's Grocery Serves Community 55 Years continued from last newsletter June 11, 1948 Gordon H. Turner Staff Correspondent

Center of Community

The Reads and South's grocery are the center of this community, socially and commercially. Far and wide they are known for their hospitality, kindness, and industry. Minnie still runs the grocery. Asked what her husband does she said, "He tends the garden, gets in the wood, and washes the dishes."

Chided about marrying into such a good thing, Bill rejoined, "I made a living before I ever saw this woman." And that he did, having lived with his first wife, Tennessee Jackson, for 56 years before her death several years ago.

We saw Bill's pretty garden, the cellar full of canned fruit and vegetables, and "Old Red," his prize 600-pound Duroc sow with 12 brand new pigs. "I sold 8 five-months old pigs from the sow last year for $260," he said.

Expecting TVA Soon

The Read home is modest but immaculately clean. Old furniture and a beautiful pull-down kerosene parlor lamp add charm to the three rooms not used by the grocery. Ice is delivered from White Bluff and they expect TVA electricity soon. Surrounding farms in the fertile Harpeth river valley are among the state's best.

The little store has no bank account and buys on an all-cash basis, mostly in Dickson. Minnie credits any of her customers for she says they are all good to pay. She has bought their ginseng and mayapple roots in great quantities in the past, but she says nobody needs the money now and little is brought in. "And I don't handle chickens and eggs either," she said. "People have more cash nowadays and they like to eat these former delicacies which they used to swap for staple groceries."

South's grocery does a gross business of $10 to $15 a day. But with a reasonable profit, it nets the Reads enough to live on nicely, with the help of Bill's garden, their own chickens and eggs, and the hogs and cow. "It doesn't cost much to live here you know," Minnie explained. "And we can have a fresh mess of fish from Harpeth river any day we decide to go afishin!"

Asked if she had thought of changing the name of her business to Read's grocery, in honor of her new husband, Minnie emphatically answered in the negative. "Not that I don't love Bill," she explained. "But it's because all my papers, tax records, and permits are all made out in the name of South's grocery and it would be too much trouble to change it."

To be continued in next newsletter.
